When we talk about the fire service, there is no "I" in the word - TEAM. Just ask Ryan Sena (left) and Estevan Flores. Both students started the LCC Fire Science Program while in high school at Pecos. The Tuesday and Thursday bus trips from Pecos to Las Vegas paid off. Now they will graduate this semester with their AAS degrees. Good Job! For more on Sena and Flores, read a future edition of The Luna Light.

Walk for a Cure a success in Mora

The 1st Annual Walk for a Cure, coordinated by the Mora High School Career Association, was deemed a success. The students representing their respective high school and middle school organizations, Jobs for America’s Graduates (JAG), Peer Educators, Business Professionals Association (BPA) and Middle School Student Government collaborated and organized the entire event. Many of these students are also enrolled in the dual-credit program at Luna Community College.

Approximately 100 community members participated in the community’s first ever event held, and walked the three miles for Breast Cancer Awareness. Registered walkers received a t-shirt that was designed by the students. Early registration was $15 and on the day of the walk, $20, with all proceeds donated to the Susan B Komen Foundation. Many local and a few out of town businesses, volunteer fire departments and bands, as well as Luna Community College co-sponsored this event.

When the participants finished their 3-mile trek, they were welcomed back by a local band Falling Horizon, consisting of high school students, Jeremy and Daniel Medina and Luna Community College student, Chris Barela. While enjoying the music and eating healthy snacks, participants were able to write on a banner to whom they were dedicating their walk. It is with great hope, by the students, that the JAG program continues so that this event becomes a tradition for the community in the awareness of a cure for breast cancer.

LCC dual credit high school students Amber Duran and Alex Martinez hold the Walk for the Cure banner.

Spring semester registration begins on Nov. 15
