Luna Community College students Jesus Perez, Donovan Velasquez, Javier Estrada and geology instructor Joel Stone put some extra time outside of class recently. Luna Community College students are encouraged to take advantage of many tutoring services offered by the college.

Higher Education Bond C passes

New Mexico voters approved G.O. Bond C by an overwhelming majority last Tuesday. By doing so, higher education institutions from across the state will receive $139,755,000 in funding for much-needed improvements and renovations.

As of Nov. 5, results showed 267,746 votes for Bond C, while 180,006 votes against. The breakdown in percentages is 59.8 for with 40.2 against.

By passing of Bond C, Luna Community College's Santa Rosa Satellite will receive $1 million to complete the interior upgrade for the Regional Health and Safety Center to include:

HVAC, electrical, interior partitioning for classroom areas, computer lab with ITV access with teleconferencing capabilities, instructor guided spinning course training, yoga and aerobics. Open areas will consist of cardio area, free weight areas. Also included will be both women's and men's ADA approved facilities and dressing areas.

In addition, Luna Community College's Springer Satellite will receive $380,000 for renovations to its main building. The money will be used for HVAC improvements which includes the lowering of the ceiling, all the ductwork and installation of the system on top of the roof. The money will also be used to rewire most of the electrical system.

According to Mario Sanchez, of Cooney, Watson & Associates, Inc., Guadalupe and San Miguel County were fourth and fifth respectively as top performing counties by percentage in voting for Bond C.

Guadalupe County voters approved the measure with 66.31 percent, while 64.86 percent of the voters in San Miguel County voted for Bond C. Only Taos, McKinley and Santa Fe Counties approved the bond at a higher rate.
