LCC's Patricia Natewa shows "exceptional work" in electronics class

Patricia Natewa has always had the knack to fix things. Recently, she took her natural talent to another level. Natewa's expertise caught the eye of her electronics instructor Sequoia Romero.

"Patricia built a radio and made it work," said Romero. "She displayed talent and determination. This is exactly what is required for an engineer to be exceptional. It's a recipe for success."

Natewa built an FM radio from a kit, sautered it and did extra work at home for Luna Community College's direct current electronics class.

"Her radio was transmitting all the local FM stations," said Romero.

Romero said that Natewa and several of his students are already showing skills in advanced electronics.

"When I was growing up and something would break in my home, my family would always ask me to fix things," says Natewa. "Whether it was a modem or Wi-Fi, most of the time I would be able to fix it."

It wasn't a surprise when one day at home, Natewa got her radio to work.
