Students: make sure you are officially registered

By Jesse Gallegos
Commentary/Analysis

It’s been almost two decades since I registered for college courses. Like many typical college students, I thought if I signed up for classes it was a done deal.

But like most everything in life, there are more steps that need to be taken. Always keep in mind that to be officially registered a student has to visit the fiscal office and make financial arrangements for your tuition. If you don’t, there is a good chance you may be disenrolled and none of us want to see this happen.

There are many important dates to remember this spring semester. Classes begin on Tuesday, Jan. 18 and the first deadline to make financial arrangements to avoid disenrollment is Thursday, Jan. 20.

The last day to add classes for this semester is Tuesday, Jan. 25 and the second deadline to make financial arrangements to avoid disenrollment is Friday, Jan. 28. Friday, Jan 28 is also the last day to drop classes.

There are many ways to make financial arrangements. One is to bring in your credit authorization from financial aid. You may also pay one third of the tuition with a promissory note by Thursday, Jan. 20 and make sure you pay it off by the end of the semester. Or perhaps your situation calls for a third party that will provide a purchase order.

Luna Community College’s Cathy Gonzales accepts tuition payments from students recently. Students are being reminded that they are not officially registered unless they make financial arrangements with the fiscal office.

Either way you look at it, it is important to be as informed as possible. I was in your shoes once upon a time and the best solution for everyone involved is for both the student and college to communicate with one another.

Here is an important number to remember: 505/454-2506. This is the direct number to our fiscal office.

Here’s to a good semester.

New Year’s Resolution: Work out at the Gerald Ortega Wellness Center

By Jesse Gallegos
Commentary/Analysis

A bad workout is better than no work out at all. I want to challenge everyone out there that has been thinking of working out but never got around to doing it, to allow 2011 to be the year to start.

And there is no better place than LCC’s Gerald Ortega

Wellness Center.

My question to all of you is simple—why not start off the new-year committed to getting healthier by joining our Gerald Ortega Wellness Center? The price for a one credit hour for the entire semester is only $38 and it is only $28 for senior citizens.

Board member Frankie Tenorio speaks out on vocational facilities

By Jesse Gallegos

The following interview was conducted with Luna Community College Board Trustee Frankie Tenorio who oversees the college's facilities committee.

1) I understand you toured the welding, auto collision and auto mechanic building recently, what is your perception of them?

I felt like I stepped into a time machine that took me back about 25 years! The facilities are in desperate need of renovation and upgrades, and the equipment that is being utilized for instruction is also in dire need of replacement.

I commend the work of the facility crews and code compliance officer, for a well kept and code compliant facility. As well as the instructors who continue to provide the highest quality training and education with what is available.

2) The Collision Repair Building was built about four years ago but never was finished. What are the plans for it?

The Collision Repair Building has been a topic of discussion at several of our facility committee meetings, and it will remain at the top of our priority list until it is completed. At this point, we are looking at different options to complete the building.

3) Two bonds, one dealing only with Luna Community College and the other a statewide bond, both failed that would have brought in resources to our vocational area? Will the college be looking at another bond in the future?

A successful statewide bond would have secured about $5 million for our vocational programs, which would have allowed LCC to complete and renovate the vocational facilities, and upgrade instructional equipment. Unfortunately, the bond was unsuccessful, due primarily, in my opinion to the economic environment.

LCC is not going to be discouraged by an unsuccessful bond; LCC will remain positive, proactive, and continue to seek out funding sources to enhance and modernize the vocational areas.

4) What can we tell current and potential students about our vocational area?

Given the facilities and instructional equipment provided, LCC's vocational programs are some of the finest in the state.

Graduates leave LCC with a sense of accomplishment, skilled, prepared, and ready to enter the work force. LCC will continue to work diligently to acquire state of the art equipment and provide modern facilities, so students and instructors can learn and work comfortably.

5) Luna Community College vocational students have a history of doing well at SKILLSUSA Competition (Skills USA is a national nonprofit organization serving students from both the college and high school level who are preparing for careers in trade, technical and skilled service occupations including health occupations). What does this tell you about our students?

Luna Community College President Dr. Pete Campos and LCC Facilities Director Ron Gonzales evaluate both the inside and outside of the unfinished Collision Repair Building. The college hopes to secure resources to finish the building.

I am always impressed with how well LCC's students perform at the state and national levels. Performing well at the national level is a true testament to the skills and knowledge that students obtain at LCC. It also implies that students are highly motivated, talented, and are making a strong connection with their instructors.

College Night

It is time again to prepare for another College Night! College Night 2011 will be held from, 5 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Feb. 9 at the Abe Montoya Recreation Center.

At this time I am taking your requests for tables/chairs and AC power (if needed) for your respective departments. E-mail or call Tom @ ext. 1204. We will be in touch with more information.

Thank you.

Top 5 e-mails do's and don'ts

"By requiring employees to use appropriate, businesslike language in all electronic communications, employers can limit their liability risks and improve the overall effectiveness of the organization's e-mail and Internet copy in the process."

Ever get copied on an e-mail that does not apply to you? Have trouble reading a message because there are so many recipients in the "To:" field? As a business professional, there are some simple rules to follow that will help you avoid looking like an amateur in the world of e-business communication.

Do not write in CAPITALS

Writing in all capitals can convey that you are shouting in your message, and nobody likes to be yelled at. Consider other ways to get your message across while conveying its importance. Using all capitals can be annoying and trigger an unintended response.

BCC recipients or use a mail merge

When sending a mailing, some people place all the e-mail addresses in the To: field. If the recipient list is large, that means that all your readers will have to scroll through the list of those on the e-mail to read the message. In the case of viewing e-mail on a Smartphone, this can be extra irritating. You also have to consider that others may not want their e-mail address published for everyone to see. You can avoid both these issues by using the BCC field, or using a program like Outlook to do a mail merge that sends a unique message to each person on your list.

Do not use e-mail to discuss confidential information

E-mail messages are easy to copy, print

what you mean.

Do not request delivery and read receipts

This will almost always annoy your recipient before he or she has even read your message. Besides, it usually does not work anyway since the recipient could have blocked that function, or his/her software might not support it. If you want to know whether an e-mail was received, it is better to ask the recipient directly to let you know.

So why all the rules? For one, it's important to remain professional in company communications, both to appear competent to your customers, and because you never know who may intercept your mail. Second, e-mails that are to the point and easy to read are more efficient. Lastly, employees that understand e-mail etiquette are less likely to put the company at risk.

While there are many more rules for e-mail etiquette, they all may not apply to your company. All businesses should create their own internal e-mail policy and make sure employees have a copy and understand the guidelines.

Information submitted by Mike Adams.

So why all the rules? For one, it's important to remain professional in company communications, both to appear competent to your customers, and because you never know who may intercept your mail.

and forward. If you don't want anything getting out, don't e-mail it. Plus, remember that even if that e-mail isn't forwarded on to someone else, company management can easily intercept inappropriate mail.

Take care with abbreviations and emoticons

Save abbreviations like LOL (laugh out loud) or IDK (I don't know) for text messages among friends. Some may not understand your abbreviations. And while emoticons are fun, they just aren't professional and you don't know how the recipient will take them. Just like abbreviations, readers may not know what they mean. It's better to spell it out and write

Training for staff and faculty

This message is to LCC regular full-time professional/support staff and regular full-time faculty:

Digital Photography

Feb 8-Mar 31 Tue/Thur 5:30-7pm

LCC Main Campus, Media Arts Lab

Instructor: Rachel Montoya Cost: $50

In this class, learn the basics of photography as you explore the capabilities of your digital camera. Find out how and when to use flash, and experiment with photographic composition to get the most out of your camera – and yourself. Learn how to use the point-and-shoot capabilities of your camera, practice downloading photos from your camera to a computer, and eventually printing your photos. The class is recommended for the novice photographer as well as film photographers who want to make a switch to digital. Bring your digital camera, manual and extra batteries to class.

Why choose a career in fire science?

By Lorenzo Montoya, Jr./Fire Science Instructor

Every year, fire and other emergencies take thousands of lives and destroy property worth billions of dollars. Firefighters help protect the public against these dangers. They are frequently the first emergency personnel at the scene of a traffic accident or medical emergency and may be called upon to put out a fire, treat injuries, or perform other vital functions.

Employment of firefighters is expected to grow about as fast as the average for all occupations through 2012, as fire departments continue to compete with other public safety providers for funding. According to the United States Fire Administration, nearly 70 percent of fire companies are staffed by volunteer firefighters. Most job growth will occur as volunteer fire-fighting positions are converted to paid positions. In addition to job growth, openings are expected to result from the need to replace firefighters who retire, stop working for other reasons, or transfer to other occupations.

Luna Community College provides training in firefighting occupation including supervisory and administrative positions. The program provides instruction leading to an associate of applied science degree in fire science. It is designed for individuals serving in the profession and as a preparatory program for individuals seeking a career in the fire service.

What will I learn in the Fire Science Program at LCC?

- How to analyze and evaluate fire and emergency incidents and describe components of incident command and firefighter safety.

- Describe the role of code enforcement in a comprehensive fire prevention program.
- Analyze the cause of fire, describe extinguishment agents and methods, differentiate the stages of the fire and fire development, and compare methods of heat transfer.
- Describe basic instructional knowledge as applied in the fire service.
- Identify and describe concepts of management, leadership, ethics and human relations as applied in the fire service.

Why is the Fire Science program at LCC so outstanding?

- All faculty members possess the Fire Service Instructor I IF-SAC Certification and have real-life experience in the fire service.
- The curriculum follows current NFPA job performance standards and the FESHE model.
- An articulation agreement exists with the New Mexico Firefighters Training Academy that makes it possible to receive college credit (waiver) for academy training.
- The Fire Science degree requires 36 credit hours of General Education CORE curriculum requirements.
- The program promotes students to obtain applicable IFSAC certifications.
