

You can still respond to the 2020 Census!

The Census is a decennial count of every person living in the United States.

It determines the distribution of federal funding and political representation of every state.

WHO TO COUNT

Where there are more people, more funding and resources are needed. This funding supports our roads, schools, nonprofits, and so much more.

- Count everyone in your home. This includes babies, relatives, roommates, and anyone else living in your home — even those who aren't related to you.

HOW TO COUNT

Due to COVID-19, there have been some delays, so not everyone has received their form.

- If you have received an invitation or form from the U.S. Census Bureau, fill out your census today.
- If you have not received anything from the U.S. Census Bureau, wait to respond until they send you information.
